846 852 [604] [242] headgear resembling that in which the Tibetan saint Padmasambhava (Guru Rimpoche) is always attired, and she puts it on the child's head. It will wear this until it grows out of it. The feast lasts two days, and the guests are served with amai mar-zan (Ama-ai Mar-zan) or "mother's mar-zan", which all can now safely eat in the household.

In wealthier families, two more festive occasions are observed: Bdün-da-kang (bDun Zla-Gang) after seven weeks (Bdün stands for "seven") in which many more people, sometimes the whole village, are entertained; and pang-ri (Pang-Dri) or "lap fragrance" in which a vast concourse of friends, relatives and guests are entertained for three days, if the new-born is a boy. On this last occasion, it is customary for the maternal grandmother to have tsampa served to everybody present. [603]

[184] [302] There is no equivalent of the ral-dag or hair-cutting ceremony of Lahul, in Ladak. But at the birth of a son, it is not unusual for superstitious people to cut off a small lock and to stuff it into a willow tree. This is called the performance of ral-chang (Ral-lChang) or "long-hair willow".

553 [551] A child receives its names at no special time. There are three of them, and one of them is always kept secret and never revealed during the whole lifetime of the person. The parents can name their child, or they can take it to a lama who will give it names in writing on a piece of Tibetan paper, stamped with the seal of the monastery. The astrologer is sometimes asked to give auspicious names to a child after he has made its horoscope, and in the more important Ladaki families it is customary for the king of Ladak to be asked to name their offspring.

171 I have gone at length into these various ceremonies connected with the birth and initiation of children, as well as with notions of cleanliness and pollution in ritual matters which have to do with child-bearing and death, because it appears to me to be so very revealing of the psychology of the polyandrous Ladakis. Such ritualistic practices are to be found in other, non-polyandrous societies elsewhere in the world, and they compare very favourably with Indian ways in these matters. But it is of interest, it seems to me, to note that they exist also among the polyanders of an area of Tibetan cultural affinity, with the special characteristics which I have described above.
